	2. Cabinet discussions continue in Indonesia:
25X1A	with the Masjumi (a Moslem Party and the
•	and with the other parties that supported the former government in an attempt to discover a basis on which to form a coalition cabinet. The question at issue is whether the Indonesian Nationalist Party will modify certain of its leftist policies with a view to enabling the Masjumi, the majority party in Parliament, to agree to participate in a new government. If these two parties cannot reach an agreement, the Indonesian Nationalist Party may fall back on a cabinet based on a broad party grouping, excluding the Socialist and Communist parties and the Masjumi.
	Comment: A cabinet formed by the Indonesian Nationalist Party without the relatively conservative influence of the Masjumi may lead to either a highly unstable or a leftist government in Indonesia. Responsible Masjumi leaders are aware of this danger, however, and are therefore believed to be willing to make considerable concessions to the Indonesian Nationalists.

25X1	4. Current Egyptian position on the Anglo-Egyptian treaty issue less extreme:
	retary of State McGhee in Cairo, Egyptian Foreign Minister Salaheddin reviewed *	Egypt's position regarding the Anglo- Egyptian treaty issue. In the clearest exposition to date of the Egyptian side of the controversy, Salaheddin stated that (a) Egypt would admit
	British forces in wartime but not in peacetime, (b) the evacuation of British troops from the Suez Canal base should take place with a year to eighteen months, anowing time for the training of 10,000-20,000 Egyptian combat troops and 400 pilots to take over the defense job from the UK, and (c) the UK should evacuate the Sudan in two or three years, since the Sudan issue is inextricably tied to the question of British evacuation of Egypt. Salaheddin also contended that the Middle Eastern countries should have the first word regarding the defense of their own territories. He asserted that Egypt would maintain the Suez base until it was needed by the UK in wartime and that the final result would depend to a large extent upon the amount of military and economic aid given Middle Eastern countries.

Comment: An Egyptian position as outpect for success in the Anglo-Egyptian treaty discussions. Two aspects of the Egyptian position — which is held both by the government and the general populace — are unrealistic: (a) Egypt cannot adequately maintain the Suez Canal base, and (b) the majority of the Sudanese political parties, while wishing for independence, oppose any kind of association under the Egyptian Crown.
